GAOL TREATMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY PRESS." SIR.—The finding of the jury in the inquest on a Chinese prisoner who died on the 7th inst... supported by the evidence of Dr. Cantlie, was as ollows:-"That the deceased died of dysentery, and were of opinion that the continued deprivation of proper food to which the deceased was subjected greatly aggravated the disease from which he died." Now, Sir, with this before on yes I think His Excellency the Administrator should appoint a committee composed mostly of medical practitioners in this colony, assisted by some of the unofficial members of the Council, to enquire into the treatment of prisoners and frame by-laws for the guidance of the guol anthorities .- Yours, etc.

HUMANII Y. Hongkong, 24th November, 1890. There are by-laws already in existence, and more than one committee has reported on gad trentment.—Ep. D. P.

We needed a little change; a short respite from our busy Shanghai life with its incessant anoncements social and official, its committeeus, arduous pasteral and literary Chinese work and school-keeping. But even if we, by a resolute wrench should break away from these manifold claims, whither should we go? The two favourite resorts for weary Shanghailanders. Japan and Chefoo, the Highlands and Searborough of foreign life in China, were too far away for our limited leave of absence; and after much consideration and counsel-holding we decided to take house-boat for Chapoo, itself a large native city, some 800 li away, but murrounded with billy country and quite near the sea. .To residents in this land, it is needless to dilate on the differences between a trip to the sesside at home and in China; where save at the ports there can be no writing or telegraphing to hutel or lodging-house, to find prepared comfortable beds, and a well furnished table; where the only alternatives as to shelter are a house boat and a heathen temple; the only provisions such stores as one can carry, with an occasional chance to buy fowls and fish from the natives. So passing by the manifold preparations for our trip, we start from the Foochow Road jetty. and with wind and tide in our favour reach our

I felt when we returned to luncheon that our house-boat; life, was cortainly losing its attraction. Even early that morning our cup of ten had been appoiled by timeed milk : and now our bread was turning to brick, our butter to oil, while our oven was disabled by a large bole. Misled by a short interval of cool weather in Shanghai, we had brought fresh instead of preserved meat, and only a skinny fowl was now estable: while some bacon on which I had much depended was left behind. Well. we must make the hest of biscuits and filtered water and rise above unpalatable provisions and culinary calamities: so we climbed another hill. Here we found a staicouse of solid stone slabs, each one of its many hundred steps a single block about five feet long : it led up to a temple finely situated in view of the sea. We made acquaintance here with the resident Buddhist priest, who had dwelt thirty years in this louely spot, a kindly man, but somewhat dreamy, not to say imbegile, in countenance and manner. My companion told me that in the wide bay we wer- surveying a missions y had in 1847 been Sovereigne, Bank's Buying Rate 587 robbed and drowned by pirates in a junk to which he had entrusted himself for crossing to Ningpo.

Two men appeared to be in churce of the place, who showed us the aforesaid lodging, one. large room opening from the temple, whose only recommendation segmed its bareness, allowing for easy sweeping and cleaning. And now for the light-house standing a few yards away. The Whitby light-house was the last I had inspected, and contracting with its towaring height, its perfection of apparatus, and dassing clean inosa. this poor building, this small and dirty lamp, it was bard to believe in the efficacy of the latter on this dangerous coast.. The lower storey was a kind of chapel containing a tawdry painted plaster image of the god of war, a hideous creature: his feet rested on the head of a dragon emorging from green plaster waves. A few steps like a bay-loft ladder led up to the lamp chamber: on each of whose walls was a window of different coloured glass, dim with dirt. Luzon Sugar A day or two longer, during which we enjoyed every hour apart from our larderless, rat-ridden house-best, we lifted anchor for home, deciding to make a short stay en route at the large city of Bing-oo, "the Lake of Pears." Very pictures. que this city looked as we neared it towards annset. The river widened greatly at this point, but was a good deal filled up by huge rafts of tim- Plantingber; a graceful pageda, near-the water's edge, a fine stone bridge, a large temple stantling on an island in mid-stream, formed a striking view, A foreign-lady was a rare apparition in this region, and myonly safeguard from being mobbed | Steamship Coys. in the city streets was in welking before my husband, as the rash of natives was in our rear. A thick stick he carried was even broken" in my defence. I saw in many shops a form of money for the dead new to me-imitations of the dollar coin in silver paper. Darkness was Trust & Loan Co. coming on as we returned to our best; through Watson & Co., A. S. the gloom under the deep archway of the city gate I discerned a man on a pallet under a coarse netting ourtain, smoking an opinim pipe; a perfect type of luxurious dreamy repose, and of the possibilities of abstraction, for the smoker was actually under the pressure of constant and was a city sentinel. What an extraordinary Old Malwa..... preparation for watchfulness, I exclaimed. "It Older Malwa $530 will serve him as a stimulant," was the reply; Patus (New) $490

It was almost impossible to make way for me amidst the concourse of natives who followed and surrounded us on thoquay. We looked back, when at last safely on board our boat, on a sea of human faces; as far back as we could see, and MESSES. Next day we had also a long stuppage and landed for a walk in the rice-fields, where the crop, with its graceful golden drooping ears, was in rich beauty. The whole population of a small hamlet beyond the fields came out to meet us. What a strangely animal; not to say vegetable existence must be lived in such isolated rustic settlements l' One man in Wladivostock the group could read, so we left with him a little Tokio literature.
